FROM THE FATHERS

“A FIRM and trustworthy basis for hope of the deification of human nature is God’s incarnation, which makes man a god in the same measure as God Himself became man. For it is clear that He who became man without sin can also deify nature, without transforming it into the Deity, raising it to Himself in the measure that he humbled Himself for man’s sake. Speaking of this mystery, the great Apostle says, ‘That in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of His Grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus’ (Eph. 2:7).“

St. Maximus the Confessor, + AD 662

“SO, rightly believing what we were taught, and understanding the mystery of the Lord’s Transfiguration, let us make our way towards the radiance of that Light. As we long for the beauty of unchanging glory, let us cleanse the eyes of our understanding from all earthly defilements, despising every delight and beauty that is not lasting, for sweet though it may be, it procures eternal suffering, and though it may enhance the body, it clothes the soul in that ugly robe of sin, on account of which the man without the garment of incorruptible union was bound and taken away into outer darkness.”

St. Gregory Palamas, + AD 1359
